Republican Jim Reese Launches Campaign for Richland County Council District 1

Pledges Responsible Growth and Transparent Leadership

Irmo, SC — Today, Jim Reese, a Republican and lifelong resident of Irmo, announced his candidacy for Richland County Council District 1. Reese is running on a platform focused on managing growth responsibly, improving county services, and increasing transparency in local government.

Reese, a pastor at Forward City Church in Columbia, is a homegrown conservative leader committed to preserving the values that have long defined Richland County while guiding its growth in a thoughtful and sustainable way. His campaign will prioritize responsible development that respects the character of local communities, more efficient county government, and greater transparency in decision-making.

“Richland County is growing, and we need leadership that manages that growth responsibly while protecting the communities people already call home,” said Reese. “I’m running to ensure taxpayer dollars are used wisely, decisions are made transparently, and residents have a real voice in shaping the future of this county.”

Reese’s platform emphasizes:

- Responsible Growth that protects community identity and infrastructure
- Efficient Government that delivers results and reduces waste
- Transparency & Accountability that builds trust with residents through open, honest decision-making

A graduate of Newberry College, Reese is married to his childhood sweetheart, Elisa Meetze. Together, they are raising their four children in the Irmo community.

“I’m running for Richland County Council because I love this community,” Reese added. “Irmo, Dutch Fork, and Ballentine are home for our family, and I want to leave them better than I found them.”

Born and raised in Irmo, Reese is the youngest child of parents who met at Fort Jackson and chose to build their lives in the Midlands.
